ENGL 631: STUDIES IN NONFICTION PROSE

Life Writing from the Concrete Tomb, or Prison Autobiography

Language gave me a way to keep the chaos of prison at bay and prevent it from devouring me.

Office Hours: Tues. 9:00-11:00 and by appointment

In this course, we will read 20th-century and contemporary autobiographies by imprisoned and formerly imprisoned people in the United States—the country with the highest imprisonment rate in the world. Prison autobiographies provide imaginative access to a highly controlled and locked down space, a complex site of bodily mortification and daily resistance. We will consider conversion narratives and liberation narratives as well as the rhetorical and thematic similarities between slave narratives and prison memoirs. How free is a prison story? We will study the history and politics of what is called the carceral state, racial disparities that persist in criminal sentencing, and the role of the humanities in public life.

The modern penitentiary was designed with death in mind. The idea was this: Isolated in a cell, chastened by silence, disciplined by labor, the imprisoned subject would reflect and become penitent, journey through death to rejoin the human family, reborn, rehabilitated. It pretty much never worked that way. (According to Michel Foucault, it was never meant to work that way.) Our literary works offer critiques of policing and the criminal justice system, analyze gendered and racialized carceral environments, testify to internal and communal resources for survival and transformation, and reflect on the nature of time and isolation.

For those interested, there will be an opportunity to visit the Appalachian Prison Book Project, a local nonprofit that sends free books to imprisoned people in six states.

Course Goals
• To read 20th-century and contemporary prison autobiographies
• To learn about the history of the modern prison in the United States
• To consider the racial dimensions of the criminal justice system
• To create a supportive intellectual and creative community
• To reflect on, and contribute to, the humanities in public life
Learning Outcomes

By the end of the semester, students should be able to:

- Contribute to scholarly discussions about prison autobiographies
- Identify patterns and tropes in “prison writing”
- Define the carceral state and the prison industrial complex
- Compose a strong analytical research essay in response to a literary work
- Respond thoughtfully to the ideas of others
- Present ideas clearly and effectively in writing and speech
- Comment on the role of the humanities and public scholarship in the academy and the broader culture.

GRADING DISTRIBUTION

1) Participation 15
2) Six Reader Responses (paced) 30
3) Annotated Bibliography 10
4) Conference Presentation 15
5) 12-page Research Essay 30

REQUIREMENTS

1) Participation (15 points)
Participation mainly involves active discussion during class, offering ideas and interpretations as well as responding to others. It can also involve posting or commenting on our blog and talking with me in my office.

I will especially appreciate it when students can broaden our perspective by bringing in articles, essays, or books with viewpoints that may be at odds with those in our readings.

2) Reader Responses (30 points)
You will compose six 500-word reader responses. Please pace these responses throughout the semester. You can focus on whatever you would like in the primary or secondary literature. The best responses typically focus on a specific question or idea and are anchored in the language of literary or theoretical works. Be sure to quote directly from the texts.
Once during the semester, you have the option to write a retrospective response. This means that you can write a response after class discussion. See special folder for “Retro Responses.” Retrospective ones must be turned in within 2 weeks of the reading. You also have the option to write one creative response. With the creative option, you can construct an additional scene, write a letter to a character or an author, create a dialogue between characters from different works, or something else entirely. The goal is to offer insight into the original work through this creative engagement.

One last option! For those who are interested in writing an abstract for the final paper, you can use one of your responses for this purpose.

Please upload to ECampus reader responses by Tuesday at 6:00 PM.

3) Annotated Bibliography (10 points)
To prepare for the final essay, you will compile an annotated bibliography with a minimum of 8 sources. Each notation should be approximately 250-300 words. Sources should be varied (books, chapters, journal articles; electronic and non-electronic).

4) 12-page Research Essay (30 points)
See separate handout.

5) Conference Presentation (15 points)
At the end of the semester, we will hold a one-day symposium to showcase your work. This will be an opportunity for you to present your ideas and research to an interested, supportive public.
